

Lois Phillips HUDSON

Preserving the legacy

Aline Runner Phillips, mother of Lois Phillips Hudson, with Lucy and Laura Hudson.

Carl Phillips, father of
Lois Phillips Hudson.

Lois Phillips, yearbook
editor.

Reapers of the Dust, published 1957.

The Bones of Plenty, published 1962.

Lois' husband, Randolph Hudson, and "Lanty," who was named for The Bones of Plenty publisher, Atlantic, Little, Brown.

Lois and her orange HepCat recumbent bike. She frequently rode the 10.9 mile stretch along the Sammamish River from Bothell to Marymoor Park in Redmond, Washington.

“Mum joked that, like many other people, she always envisioned driving up to her old high school in a fancy car to show everyone that she'd "made it" (and of course, in the fantasy, all the old students would be right there watching.) So, on 9/20/2002, she asked me to take pix of her riding her fancy bicycle (an orange recumbent HepCat, as you can see), riding around in the parking lot of the old Redmond High (before they consolidated to Lake Washington). My point here, besides sharing the photos, is that the old HS is now the Redmond (WA) post office.”

- Lucy Hudson

The family sings. Laura Hudson
Desertrain, Mary Snow, Lois,
Lucy Hudson.